

Vontobel Fund - TwentyFour Sustainable Short Term Bond Income

This Commentary is a marketing communication for professional UK investors only

Market Commentary

- January began with markets continuing to digest the hawkish rhetoric delivered by the Federal Reserve (Fed) at the end of 2024. The prospect of sticky inflation took centre stage and influenced investor expectations of a slower pace of interest rate cuts relative to previous forecasts. The sovereign bond sell-off that followed was further fuelled by a stronger-than-expected US labour report, which dampened fears of a significant weakening in the jobs market. The 10-year US Treasury yield peaked at 4.8% in January following the release of the employment numbers. Treasuries then rallied as downside inflation surprises in the US and other major economies reduced concerns around sticky inflation and the higher-for-longer narrative that had been building. The high levels of volatility, exacerbated by the news that Chinese firm DeepSeek had produced an open-source artificial intelligence model that rivalled some of the US technology giant's equivalents for a fraction of the cost, led to sharp equity moves. However, primary market activity remained high and spreads continued to tighten across both European and US risk assets throughout the month.
- UK gilts came under significant pressure at the beginning of January, with an outsized sell-off across the yield curve bringing the unwelcome headline that UK borrowing costs had reached the highest level since the last century. This came as market participants continued to digest the UK's worrying inflation and growth data releases from the last few months of 2024, which suggested that the Bank of England (BoE) would have to slow its rate-cutting cycle by more than previously anticipated. As a result, sterling-denominated risk assets suffered, with investors preferring the euro or US dollar curve as the pressure on gilts intensified. The tide began to turn as the month progressed, with a promising inflation report showing a significantly weaker-than-expected services Consumer Price Index print of 4.4%, year-on-year, which should set up the BoE to cut rates by 25 basis points (bps) at its next meeting. UK assets largely reversed their price moves, as did credit spreads, which tightened quickly by the end of January.
- Both the European Central Bank (ECB) and Fed meetings at month-end did little to move markets, with the former's 25bps cut and the latter's decision to hold fully priced in prior to the announcements. The ECB's decision came despite the encouraging upside surprise in the Eurozone's flash Purchasing Managers' Index numbers, which saw the composite figure rise to 50.2, representing the highest level since August.

Portfolio Commentary

- The Fund's higher beta positions generated the best total returns. These included Restricted Tier 1, Additional Tier 1, Lower Tier 2 bank and corporate hybrid debt.
- Government bonds had positive returns, but underperformed credit given spread tightening.
- Floating rate residential mortgage-backed security positions with attractive yields were added to the asset-backed security allocation due to more modest rate-cut expectations.

Market Outlook and Strategy

- There has been a marked contrast between the US, which has escaped a 'hard landing' economic scenario and looks set for decent growth in 2025, compared with weak core (and continuing to weaken in some cases) European economies, with elections imminent in Germany.
- The UK appears to be suffering due to the Budget, with survey data pointing to a significant deterioration in both business and consumer sentiment. The BoE has halved its economic growth forecast from 1.5% to 0.75% for 2025, while expecting inflation to remain above target for two years.
- Credit spreads are approaching the tightest levels since the global financial crisis, and while we have no default concerns on any portfolio holdings, the risk of modest spread widening is possible. Thus, the portfolio retains a lower credit spread duration position than the historical average for market-to-market reasons.

Where ratings are available from the credit rating agencies specified in the portfolio's rating methodology, including S&P Global Ratings Inc, Moody's Investor Services Inc & Fitch Ratings Inc, TwentyFour will use the highest of the available ratings. Moody's® assigns a rating of Aaa as the highest to C as the lowest credit quality rating. S&P® assigns a rating of AAA as the highest to D as the lowest credit quality, Fitch assigns a rating of AAA as the highest to D as the lowest credit quality. Additionally, where no rating has been requested, or there is insufficient information on which to base a rating, a rating agency may assign a rating of NR (Not Rated). For unrated sovereign issues TwentyFour will adopt the issuing sovereign's credit rating. The average credit quality (ACQ) is provided to indicate the average credit rating of the portfolio's underlying investments' rating and may change over time. The portfolio itself has not been rated by an independent rating agency and is provided for informational purposes only. The ACQ is determined by using a market-weighted equivalent rating and rounding to the nearest rating. For unrated bonds and cash and equivalents, when calculating the ACQ ratings TwentyFour will determine an internal rating by considering all relevant factors, including but not restricted to, the relationship between the bond's maturity and its price and/or yield, the ratings of comparable bonds, the issuer's financial statements and the issuer's credit rating if available. The risk of default increases as a bond's rating decreases, so the ACQ provided is not a statistical measurement of the portfolio's default risk because a simple weighted average does not measure the increasing level of risk from lower-rated bonds. The ACQ may be lower if cash and equivalents are excluded from the calculation. Derivative positions are not reflected in the ACQ.
